The "magic of the movies" is apparent whenever we feel transported to another place or time, and like many things, it takes a village to bring this magical effect. Join us for a look behind the scenes in our latest panel discussion, Location, Location: Exploring Seattle Through the Filmmaker's Lens. April also marks the return of our walking tours as several other opportunities to connect with the architecture, history, and design of Seattle. Read on to learn more!

Location, Location: Exploring Seattle Through the Filmmaker's Lens, April

A Design In Depth Lecture, SIFF Cinema Uptown, 6:30 - 8pm

Like music and literature, film provides an immersive experience that can transport us to new places and perspectives. Following Seattle's history on film, we can see both a documentation of how our built environment has changed, but also the ways in which narratives of Seattle have evolved, from early Hollywood features to local productions happening today. Looking behind-the-scenes, our experience of a film can be seen as a product of countless dedicated individuals along every stage of the process—from location scouts, advocates of our majestic theaters, and champions within creating spaces, and stories, that allow us to feel connected to a different time, location or person.

Regionalism and Modernism in Seattle Architecture, 1936 - 1975 with Jeffrey Karl Ochsner
In partnership with the Seattle Public Library
April 25, Central Library, 1-3pm, FREE

How does the legacy of regionalism and modernism from the 1930s - 1970s affect design today? UW professor and architectural historian, Jeffrey Karl Ochsner, returns once more in a lecture that addresses the origins and development of regional architecture in the Seattle area. The lecture will focus on single-family residences, small institutional buildings, and town houses because these were the types of projects where architects most frequently incorporated a regionalist approach to design. Ochsner will discuss architects, building types, constructional character, stylistic directions and other aspects of the mid-century modern architecture reflective of this region.
